Watch the '62 Restoration

It's been some time since we've given you an update on the 1962 "sinkhole" Corvette, but work has been well underway since February to bring it back to the condition it was in when it was donated to the Museum. Daniel Decker has been hard at work in the garage bay next to the AutoZone Maintenance Area, and Museum visitors have been able to catch a glimpse of the progress.

"We have all of the paint stripped, and we went in and started trimming the broken front fender for rebonding and fiberglassing back in," said Daniel. "The driver side door, hood and trunk lid scratches have all been repaired. We have received the new rear quarter panel section, so we have got the old one cut out, and the new portion fitted."

The new and old will come together before visitors' eyes on Friday, November 3. Work will continue on the car pretty much every week day from now until the car is complete and visitors to the Museum can observe the work in action daily, until 3pm.

The restored car is planned to be revealed on the fourth anniversary of the sinkhole, February 12, 2018.

ZR1 Convertible Announced

On Tuesday evening at the LA Auto Show it was announced that the C7 ZR1 would also be offered as a convertible. The base price is said to start at $123,995 and ZR1 purchases come with a two-day, ZR1 specific performance driving school at Spring Mountain. A fully optioned ZR1 will top out around $140,000 and the top speed is 212 MPH. Two trim options are available - 1ZR (black interior only) and 3ZR (all available color choices for interior and priced at approximately $10,000).
